

“100% of those who attended said that their expectations were met completely. The unanimous response on the day was fantastic and all agree that it was the best study day held here for many a day”

Gladys Leyden RN.RM.F.FN.R.C.S.I. Director of Nursing Clane General Hospital

Do your records stand up to scrutiny? Do you worry about the implications of what you or your staff record?

The concept of accountability is one which is familiar to all nurses and healthcare professionals. While the term is in constant use, many would have problems defining Accountability. Each nurse is, on a personal level, answerable and can be called to account for their professional conduct. All healthcare professionals produce records in the course of their work which are regularly relied on as evidence in legal cases. All too often they fall short of required professional and evidential standards when examined in courts, at inquests, tribunals and professional committees. This may have serious consequences for both you and your employer.
